Why are School Climate and Discipline Important?
School climate reflects how members of the school community experience the school. Positive school climates help students stay engaged, learn, and maintain respectful, trusting relationships with each other and school staff. While various practices, conditions, and norms have influence over school climate, a school’s discipline policies and practices can send a clear message to students as to whether they are valued as part of the school community and whether they are seen as partners in their education.

School discipline practices that remove children from schools and classrooms – such as suspension and expulsion – hinder their ability to learn. Nearly three million K-12 students nationwide received at least one out-of-school suspension in the 2013-2014 school year. Suspensions are linked to poorer academic performance, higher rates of dropout, failure to graduate on time, decreased academic engagement, and increased risk of involvement with the juvenile justice system. Additionally, suspensions are not shown to be effective ways of improving student behavior or school climate. In many school districts across the nation, suspensions are not distributed equitably. Often students of color, those with disabilities, and male students bear the brunt of the burden.

Fortunately, research shows that there are practices that support students’ physical and emotional safety and contribute to a positive school climate. These practices can reconnect students to their school environments, particularly historically marginalized groups.

Who Should Use this Directory?
This directory is designed to support school staff – including classroom educators, specialized instructional support personnel, principals, and administrators – in improving school discipline practices. As the people working with students each day, school staff have the greatest control over whether, how frequently, and what type of discipline is administered.

Improving school discipline requires a shift in mindset and practice. School staff can facilitate this shift by seeking training and resources on alternative discipline practices. Additionally, by communicating what is and is not working to families, the community, and state/local officials, school staff can drive positive school discipline forward and support peers in other locales.

How to Use this Directory
The U.S. Department of Education has laid out three Guiding Principles to help communities improve school discipline practice: 1) positive school climates; 2) clear, appropriate, and consistent expectations and consequences; and 3) equity and continuous improvement. This directory contains resources to help school staff incorporate these principles into their daily work.

Capacity Building Tools
Federal agencies have funded the development of a variety of products—including training materials, guides, briefs, and presentations—to inform school staff about school climate and discipline, and how to improve it. The items below are intended to provide school staff with background information on the relevance of school climate and discipline to school functioning, and build their skills to implement strong practices.

Data, Measurement, and Reporting

As part of any effort to improve school climate and discipline practice, it is imperative that schools have access to data that can continuously inform the implementation of new approaches, diagnose emerging issues, and inform the surrounding community of the progress of these efforts. Federal agencies provide a range of products to help school staff to collect and analyze data relevant to school climate and discipline practices through various approaches, including school climate surveys, fidelity assessments, and evaluations of educator practice. This section highlights the most significant products that may assist school staff in these areas.

Policy Guidance

To encourage the creation of safe supportive learning environments and compliance with applicable laws, federal agencies have compiled relevant state statutes, developed guidance to clarify federal law. The federal agencies have also developed specific guidance to address specific emerging issues, including bullying and discipline, and their implications for schools’ civil rights liability. The following are the primary policies and guidance the federal and state governments have developed related to school climate and discipline.
